I am looking for companies or individuals in Tulsa, Oklahoma that use ColdFusion. I run the Tulsa Macromedia User's Group and we are thinking about switching to a ColdFusion Users Group, to better focus on that which interests the attending members the most. I would like to find out how much interest there is in the community for a ColdFusion group and when would work best for those interested.

No, this doesn't have anything to do with the Adobe buyout of Macromedia. Given that we will have to change our name anyway, however, the timing is convenient.

Anyway, while I know of several companies and individuals in Tulsa that use ColdFusion, I would like to learn of any of which I am unaware. I have done a Google search, but many of those I know using ColdFusion don't turn up in a Google search for such, so I imagine others using ColdFusion in Tulsa wouldn't turn up in a Google search as well.

If you (or someone you know) are in (or near) Tulsa and use ColdFusion, let me know. You can either leave me a comment or contact me directly.

While I am on the topic of ColdFusion, a new site was just brought to my attention: ColdFusion Gear sells T-Shirts (and soon more) for ColdFusion developers. I haven't gotten any yet, but I will soon.

Thanks!
