I'm Speaking at cf.Objective() this year!

Posted At : January 25, 2011 1:45 PM | Posted By : Steve Related Categories: ColdFusion, Personal

It is hard to believe, but I have been accepted to speak at cf.Objective() this year. I have been to this conference twice before and I loved it both times. The presentations were great and so were the hallway and dinner conversations. It seemed like I was learning something all the time.

I am honored and humbled (ok, intimidated) to be among the speakers at cf.Objective() 2011. They recently announced the schedule and it is well, awesome! Seriously, go take a look. I'll wait.

Did you look through those presentations? I would say if you are serious about ColdFusion then this conference has something for you. For me, it has more that I want to learn than my brain will likely be able to absorb. Needless to say, I am excited to go.

Early bird pricing lasts until February 14, so go sign up now.

You could even see me present about custom tags, if you wanted. Then again, there are ~~three~~four (they added a whole new track!) other good presentations in that time slot alone! If you do choose to attend my presentation, I'll do my best to make sure you don't regret it (I hate the "I should have gone to another presentation" feeling when I am at a conference).

On that front, if your users group would like a remote presenter, I would love the practice!

It looks like it will be an amazing conference and I am really excited to go and learn and catch up with my fellow CF-ers. I hope to see you there!